Staying With the Farm.

Four thousand years ago, two men farmers, cattlemen; Abraham and Lot stood on the mountain side between Bethel and Hai and discussed this question: "Which is preferable, city or country life? The flocks and herds of the Abraham and Lot had become so great the land would not hold them. They had met that morning to talk over a separation in the interests of peace. During the talk Lot let fall some expressions which betrayed his inclination to go to town to live. The discovery filled the breast of his uncle Abraham with great concern, for he loved his nephew, and he remonstrated with Lot against leaving a sure good thing in the country for the chances of the city, but Lot had anticipated this, and he was fortified with the stock arguments for city life. I imagine he said first, "I very much desire better church privileges which I will have in the city." That was an unkind cut, though probably unintended; for hard by where the men stood was an altar which Abraham had builded some years before, as he journeyed that way toward toward Egypt. "What better place, Lot, than by this altar here, for the soul of man to commune with its maker, in this solemn stillness, the eternal hills around, and naught but the bending heavens above?" "Yes, that's all right, uncle, but you have no cushioned pews here, nothing but rocks to sit on, and you know yourself, uncle, that the singing is perfectly awful, and everybody comes to church here, rag-tag and bobtail, and sometimes when I get here a little late and walk down the aisle, just as likely as not some rag tag is sitting right up in front, in the biggest, smoothest, softest rock in the outfit." But Abraham made no reply. Then Lot said, "My wives have such a time getting help out here in the country to do the housework," but Abraham said, "I hear it is just as bad, or even worse, in town; indeed, some ladies came out from the city to visit us the other day and they talked the whole time about their hired girls, how hard it was to get a good one, and so on." Then Lot spoke of the bad condition of the winter season, and he was about launching into a dissertation on the subject of hard roads when I imagine Abraham said something like, "If people would only try to have a little more hard sense and do their hauling when the roads are good, which they are for about ten months in every year and keep off the roads when they are soft, we wouldn't hear so much about hard roads and bad roads." But then Lot came back with that clincher which has settled the qualms of many a man who wanted to go to town to live: "Really," he said, "uncle, I feel obliged to go to town in order to educate the children; they say they have school in town about all the time." It is a long way off, but I can plainly see the puzzled, anxious look which this school argument brought to the strong, kind face of Uncle Abraham. Nothing was too good for the children in his estimation. But to his mind education was a great, great thing. With his simple mind it was hard for him to see or understand how a few inexperienced young people could do it all for the children, even if they schooled them the year round, from youth to age. But it was the same then as now with all discussions, each side convinced itself. "Lot pitched his tent toward Sodom and dwelt in the cities of the plain," but Abraham stayed with the land. You know how it fared with Lot; he was not long "blowing in" his great fortune; domestic and financial troubles beset him, "his city went up in smoke," he escaped barely with his life, to a smaller town, but so terrified he could not even rest there, and at last slipped into a cave in the woods, a broken, disheartened man. Poor Lot; there have been lots of Lots.

But what of Abraham, the man who stayed with the land? We left him standing on the hillside, his eyes riveted on the ground, meditating deeply on that school question.

"Lift up thine eyes, Abraham, and look from the place where thou art, northward and southward and eastward, and westward, for all the land which thou seest to thee will I give it, and to thy seed forever." Why not? He stayed with it. "And I will make thy seed as the dust of the earth, then shall thy seed also be numbered." "Look now toward the heaven and tell the stars if thou be able to number them, so shall thy seed be, and I will bless thee, I shall make nations of thee and kings shall come from thee." "Arise, walk through the land, in the length of it and in the breadth of it, for I will give it unto thee." Ob, how that promise to the man who stayed with the land has been fulfilled and fulfilled, and fulfilled, over and over, again and again, and again, as the ages have rolled after the ages away.

The men who have stayed with the land have had the blessings of the earth; they have eaten its fresh, ripe fruits; they have breathed its free air, they have drunk its pure waters; they have wrought in its living sunshine; they have rested in its leafy shades. To them the changing seasons being varied, healthful, cheerful, living employment; to them the harvests bring faith and trust in a kind and bountiful providence, to them "the heavens declare the glory of God," to them the solemn, quiet nights bring visions of eternal rest and peace. The men who have staid with the land ask no man for employment; none say to them when go, when come, when lie down, when rise; they are their own masters, free. The men who have staid with the land are they who have homes. They have tasted the pure delights of simple, real, natural home life; they have felt the sweeter spell of woman's native charms, untouched by trick or gloss of art; they have pressed the rosy lips of rustic health and beauty, they have quaffed the deepest, purest, sweetest drafts of conjugal love; they have seen their children fed and clothed, and, trained by useful work, grow stronger and braver for the battles of life. From the seed of the men who have staid with the land have come the poets, the painters, the philosophers, the preachers, the teachers, the physicians, the orators, the judges, the statesmen, the captains, and the kings of the race. L. H. HERRICK.

MUST PAY TEACHERS.

School Boards Cannot Stop Wages When They Close Schools.

State Superintendent Frank Nelson lately asked Attorney Godard this question:

"Where a school is closed by the district board, or by the county health officer, can a teacher collect pay for the time the school is closed?"

Mr. Godard replied: "Said teacher would be entitled to his wages for the time such school was closed, unless provision had been made in the contract to govern such a contingency. The school board has no more right to take advantage of the provisions of the contract than has the teacher."

CAUGHT THE FLYER.

One of the Greatest Races Ever Witnessed on the Santa Fe Road.

From the Hutchinson News, Jan. 6.
The California flyer reached Hutchinson yesterday afternoon forty minutes late and the delay was caused at Newton, where the train was held until the arrival of an engine and one car train which raced after the flyer as though for life. At Kansas City yesterday morning Mr. Crane of the Crane Elevator manufactory missed the flyer. His wife and family were on the train and he determined to catch them if money had the power to do so. He followed to Topeka on No. 5, wiring ahead to have a fast special ready for his use regardless of cost. When his train reached Topeka the special was ready and Mr. Crane made a flying transfer. The California limited train had almost an hour the start. Mr. Crane's special left Topeka with orders to run to Newton, one hundred thirty-five miles, in 2 hours and 45 minutes. The flyer is only able to make the run in three hours and twenty-eight minutes. At Peterson the special's engine broke a spring and was laid out thirty-five minutes. Had it not been for this Mr. Crane would have overtaken the flyer at Newton by holding it only five minutes over time. As it was the flyer waited at Newton forty minutes when Mr. Crane arrived after taking one of the wildest rides ever experienced by any one on the Santa Fe. The family passed through Hutchinson together, but Mr. Crane took chances on a broken neck and spent a good sum of money to prove that the flyer can be caught.

Mr. Crane paid $1.80 a mile for his train, or $244.08. In addition he made Engineer Ed Whitcomb a present of $25. Fireman Tenchison $15, Conductor Carter $10 and brakeman Dargitz $10. A messenger boy was given $2 when Mr. Crane arrived in Topeka to carry a message for him, making his total expense $306.08.

GRAY COUNTY NEWS.

From the Cimarron Jacksonian, Jan. 5.

—A coyote walked off with two of J. F. Good's wolf traps one night. Mr. Good would be willing to give the coyote his liberty if he would only come back with the traps.

—C. D. Harvey, now located at Grand Junction, Col., visited his brother here last Saturday. Claud is employed as foreman of a gang of men on a sugar plantation near Grand Junction.

—Retribution always gets in its work, and the man who buys a stolen calf, knowing that it was stolen, gets the same dose as the fellow who stole it. It pays to be honest, even in little things.

—Jim Crawley hauled 2500 pounds of feed to the north Vinson pasture one day recently and took back with him twenty-five hides. Fourteen head of cattle were skinned in the same pasture this week, and thirteen more were reported down. Poor grass is said to be the cause of the loss.

—Hon. E. H. Madison, who went to Albany, N. Y., recently to confer with some of the city's creditors, writes Mayor Curtis that his efforts were attended with success and that he hopes to have everything in shape to wind up the compromise proceedings in the next thirty or sixty days.

—Garden City hunters killed three antelope and wounded two others near Jont Alley's place in Logan township last Wednesday. Ben Walker, who was up in that country hunting for de(a)r himself was an eye witness to the act, and says one of the party was a splendid marksman and did good work until he got rattled.

—Revs. Robinson of Dodge City, and Thompson of Meade, have been holding a series of meetings in Ingalls this week. Tuesday night there came near being a collision between the literary and the revival. It was however happily averted by the elect standing outside the chancel while the literary was being choked off inside.

A Narrow Escape.

Thankful words written by Mrs. Ada E. Hart, of Groton, S. D. "Was taken with a bad cold which settled on my lungs; cough set in and finally terminated in Consumption. Four Doctors gave me up, saying I could live but a short time, I gave myself up to my Savior, determined if I could not stay with my friends on earth, I would meet my absent ones above. My husband was advised to get Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Cough and Colds. I gave it a trial took in all eight bottles. It has cured me and thank God, I am saved and now a well and healthy woman." Trial bottles free at W. F. Pine's drug store.

Sam Jones: A girl who is unfaithful to her mother never came to be worth a noyed button to her husband. It isn't exactly written in the bible, but written large and awful in the miserable life of many a misfit home. I am talking for the boys this time. If ever one of you boys come across a girl that, with a face full of roses, says, as you come to the door, "I can't go for the dishes are not yet washed," you wait for that girl. You set right down on the door step and wait for her. "Cause some fellow may come along and carry her off and right there you have an angel. Wait for that girl and then stick to her like a burr on a mule's tail.

Do It Gracefully.

"There is no law on the statute books that compels a man to grant a favor to another, or give anything to charity," said a Newtonian, who has had experience in soliciting funds for worthy objects, "but there is one suggestion I would like to make. If a man gives anything at all, he ought to do it gracefully. If he gives it grudgingly, he ought to have tact enough about him to pretend that he does it willingly. There are a good many church members and people on charitable committees who will attest to my statement that there are some people they dread to ask for money. The money is given generally, but it is contributed in a way that is almost an insult to the person asking it. They would rather be refused outright. There are others who give with a cheerful air that is sure to make a gift more precious. My suggestion is this—that if a man cannot give cheerfully, and is going to give at all, he should for once in his life, act a lie by pretending that he is pleased to be allowed to donate something toward a worthy cause."

A School in Municipal Government.

A novel experiment in education is being tried in one of the Philadelphia schools, and it is meeting with success. It is an attempt, as the Record explains, to instill in the youthful mind the duties of citizenship as embodied in municipal government. The school is in reality a miniature municipality, the boys filling all the offices from mayor down to policemen. The mayor and his appointees serve one term, and the policemen serve two weeks at a time. There are also juvenile councilmen, presided over by a president, and ordinances are enacted much as they are in the larger council chambers up in the city hall, and just as much decorum is maintained during the sessions. One of the ordinances passed last term reads: "No yelling fire, playing or sitting on the fire-escapes or in the side yard. No squirting of water or throwing snowballs. No slingshots." Another ordinance says: "Cleanliness is to be observed when in the yard and in the schoolroom. Citizens must be clean." There is a jail and a police court, where justice is dispensed by a juvenile magistrate, and one of the ordinances provides that "no boy will be allowed to look in the jail windows. If he is seen doing so he will be arrested by the police." Altogether there is every incentive for the youngsters to become conversant with the duties of citizenship.

Advanced the Price of Brooms.

At a meeting of the American Broom Manufacturers' association at the Palmer House this week it was voted to advance the price of brooms 10 to 15 per cent. About sixty manufacturers from various parts of the United States and Canada representing about 85 per cent of the broom factories of the country, were present. It developed during the meeting that the Union Broom Supply Co., of Chicago, owned about 22,000 tons of brush, which is 65 per cent of the whole crop and that February 1 it will advance the price of brush from $200 to $220 a ton. By some it is believed the stuff will be worth $300 a ton before the new crop.
